The Department of Anthropology and the Office of the President hosted the President's Lecture Series on January 24, 2019. The title of the talk was, “Capacity, corporeality, containment: Boundary maintenance and social exclusion in Malaysia and Australia.”

The speaker, Dr. Lenore Manderson, is a Distinguished Professor of Public Health and Medical Anthropology in the School of Public Health, University of the Witwatersrand and Distinguished Visiting Professor of Environmental Science, Institute at Brown for Environment and Society.

Manderson is known internationally for her work on inequality and social exclusion, the social context of infectious and chronic disease, gender, sexuality and caregiving; in the US, her work focuses on art/science intersections relating to climate change.

Archaeology Lab Nights are Back!
Starting Thursday
January 17, 2019

Join us for archaeology lab nights!
Research 'open house' starting January 17th, and continuing every Thursday of the Winter Term.

Calling all undergrads, grad students, faculty and researchers who are:

- engaged in lab research or
- interested in helping out or
- learning more about archaeological research at UBC.

These informal get-togethers provide structure and socialization to the oft-lonely work of lab analysis!

Newcomers, especially undergrads, are welcome. Get to know archaeologists at UBC, learn about current archaeological research projects, and find ways to volunteer.

We have a range of research projects, but there is room for more. If you are a researcher with a project that could benefit from student help, contact Patricia Ormerod or David Pokotylo.

If you are a student interested in learning more, just show up! Enter by the door to the east (right) of the café.

Sara Shneiderman received a SSHRC Explore Grant from the Faculty of Arts for the project “Nepal's Post-Earthquake Reconstruction Outcomes: A Quantitative Survey in Conjunction” with the SSHRC PDG “Expertise, Labour and Mobility in Nepal's Post-Conflict, Post-Disaster Reconstruction.”

Shneiderman will work collaboratively with Dr. Ratna Shrestha of UBC's Vancouver School of Economics, Professor Philippe Le Billon of Geography/SPPGA, and Dr. Jeevan Baniya of Social Science Baha in Nepal, with additional support from Sampada KC, to conduct and analyze a 400-household quantitative survey in two districts of Nepal. The survey will ask whether funds invested in reconstruction after the country's massive 2015 earthquakes have led to the desired outcomes, both in terms of physical completion of reconstructed homes, and homeowner satisfaction.

Shneiderman also gave an online lecture about her current research, “Expertise, Labour and Mobility in Nepal's Post-Conflict, Post-Disaster Reconstruction” in the Peter Wall Institute for Advanced Studies Speaker Series. Click here to watch the video online.
